TEACHING STRATEGIES

Consider the following statements. Discuss with your colleagues if you wish. Determine whether you believe them to be true or not. Write in the left-hand column whether they are True or False. After completing the professional development, come back and review the statements again. Did you get them all right?

True/False Before	Statement	True/False After
	You can use the strategies from one pathway in another pathway.
	Case studies are used as teaching strategies.
	You cannot increase the odds of reaching a student simply with one evidence-based strategy.
	Feedback is a critical component of effective teaching.
	There are many types of teaching strategies and one category of teaching strategy for each type lesson.
	A strategy that works in one class will probably work in another.
	Many teaching strategies may not even be developed yet.
	You should reevaluate your teaching strategies with each year and each class.

NOTE: Many of these statements require you to draw conclusions that are beyond the scope of what you learned in this Professional Development piece. The goal is to stimulate critical thinking in how you can best utilize teaching strategies to help your students connect with your curriculum and forge a link to future skills.
